VetsWork, a program of Mt. Adams Institute, is partnering with the George Washington & Jefferson National Forests in Virginia to offer internships for military veterans aged 21-35, who enjoy the outdoors, and are interested in pursuing rewarding careers with a federal land managing agency.

Benefits of the VetsWork internships include:

- Education, training and civilian work experience for your resumé (and the opportunity to call this ⇨ your workplace).
- Establishing connections with the U.S. Forest Service, a federal land managing agency interested in filling permanent, career positions with qualified veterans.
- A living allowance, health insurance, and transferrable education award, as well as non-competitive hiring status with certain federal agencies.

2015 Opportunities for career development programs on the George Washington and Jefferson National Forests (GWJ) include 10-month internships in the areas of Volunteer and Service Programs, Partnerships, and Outdoor Recreation Management. Interns will work with specialists in numerous natural and cultural resource areas and with national partners such as the Appalachian Trail Conservancy and the Southern Appalachian Wilderness Stewards.
